Transitioning from hospital to home for patients on enteral nutrition requires careful planning and the consideration of homecare–friendly feeding plans. Cynthia Reddick, RD, CNSC, an expert in home tube feeding, will guide you through the various administration methods for enteral feeds, the intricacies of enteral nutrition tolerance and strategies for complication management, and the innovations now available in the home setting. You’ll leave feeling empowered to provide excellent continuity of care.

About the speaker:

Cynthia Reddick, RD, CNSC, is a home tube feeding expert with more than 25 years of experience in homecare facilitating patients’ successful transitions from hospital to home. She promotes positive clinical outcomes believing that a good relationship with a feeding tube enhances adherence and quality of life. She interned at City of Hope National Medical Center and has worked as National Tube Feeding Manager for Coram/CVS Specialty Infusion Services. Currently, she consults on home tube feeding and enteral innovation, and she enjoys presenting at round tables, webinars, and conferences including for the Oley Foundation, CMSA, NHIA, ASPEN, and the Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics.
