At Abbott Nutrition Health Institute, we’re dedicated to connecting and empowering health care professionals by providing science-based nutrition resources. We work with some of the finest minds in the field to bring you meaningful education, tools and research. Our goal is to make it easier for you to help your patients and advance nutrition in a way that changes lives in the communities you serve.
WHO WE ARE

Abbott has invested more than 90 years in helping people live life to the fullest. In 2007, the Abbott Nutrition Health Institute (ANHI) was established with the goal of making nutrition resources available to everyone, for every stage of life. We’ve spent the past decade presenting the latest science by bringing together a range of opinions and experts to create engaging educational content you can trust.

WHAT WE DO

ANHI’s primary goal is to understand what nutrition resources you need in your daily practice as you guide your patients toward better health. From this understanding, we transform cutting-edge research and the latest thinking into useful educational resources, presented in a variety of ways:

- We host dozens of exciting live events and webinars every year that connect you with engaging thought leaders on topics that matter.
- We also offer a wide range of group programs and online self-study courses so you can tailor your continued education to topics that interest you, in the formats that best fit your schedule.

HOW WE DO IT

At ANHI, we view our partnerships as our greatest strength. Annually we support and empower half a million practitioners and the patients they serve. Our goal is to connect you with leaders in the field who are eager to share their experiences and insights, and to give you access to the resources and tools that reflect the latest science and guidance. By building relationships with health care professionals like you, we can work together to improve nutrition outcomes worldwide.
